In the majority of diamonds, the pavilion facets are uniformly cut at the proper angle and meet at a perfect point, yielding no culet (sometimes called a pointed culet). When the pavilion facets do not meet at a point, the culet is a rough or polished facet. The presence of a culet adds an additional facet to the diamond's total number of facets, while a pointed culet does not.

Disclaimer : This guide is for those who would like to to level a monk and not feel like ‘ grinding ’ endlessly on a single map. The idea of this build is that you can progress to 99 (and trans) at a decent rate, yet still enjoy yourself. Also, this build has no combo skills, so if u wish to make a combo monk, there are other guides that will fit your needs more than this one would.

Ancient India. The process of Diamond cutting has been known in the Indian Subcontinent as early as 6th century AD. A 6th century treatise Ratnapariksa, or Appreciation of Gems states that the best form in which to have the diamond is in its perfect natural octahedral crystal form, and not as a cut stone indicating that diamond cutting was widespread practice.
